FORT LEE, NJ / NEW YORK, NY

Rosemarie Arnold has been a staple on the New Jersey Super Lawyers list since its inception in 2005. This year, she is joined by partners Evan Baker* and Paige Butler.

Super Lawyers Magazine is not the only place you can read about Rosemarie. Recently, she has made headlines for her representation of sexually abused orphans at a children's home in Fort Lee; the family of a woman killed by a drunk cop in the Bronx; and the family of a man killed when a tree fell on his house during a hurricane. Her representation of a man crippled by a falling elevator was featured on Fox News.

In the August 2012 issue of Social Life Magazine, Chris London, an attorney, editor and former client of Arnold's, praised her work as a lawyer. Having met Rosemarie when he was a legal headhunter, he says, "There was a buzz about a brilliant trial lawyer who had built a huge reputation for herself by getting big verdicts on cases other lawyers had rejected. Arnold had emerged as a veritable plaintiff's prophet developing a reputation as a 'courtroom bulldog who won't be leashed.'"

Arnold leads one of the largest teams of experienced Plaintiff attorneys in Bergen County. They offer the same personalized representation that Arnold became famous for to victims of fatal or serious accidents, sexual assaults and discrimination. When the Certified Trial Attorney is not tending to her high-profile caseload, Rosemarie is a sought-out legal expert who has shared her expertise with The New York Times, New York

Post and The Record (Bergen County), as well as ABC, NBC, CBS, FOX, The Today Show, A Current Affair and Extra TV.

Arnold's climb to the top of the legal profession had humble beginnings. Her father, a physician, died when she was 5. Her mother, a teacher, raised six kids in a two-bedroom, one-bathroom tenement in Washington Heights. While Arnold has the mental DNA for success, she is a self-made woman of the highest order, whose reputation was built the old-fashioned way: dogged work serving the interests of one client at a time, and a relentless commitment to honing all elements of her craft. Says London in his article, "It is rare to find a lawyer so proficient, with such a strong and disciplined work ethic, a Zen-like strategic sense who is also filled with such compassion, professionalism and understanding. As apparent from her wall of hundreds of thank you notes from her satisfied clients, she is the irreplaceable equivalent of having Socrates, Clarence Darrow and Mother Theresa in a suit. Yes, she is that good."
